PREFACE

TO THE REVISED EDITION.

AMONG the smaller dictionaries of the English and German languages Cassell's German Dictionary, compiled by Miss E. Weir, has for many years been held in well-deserved esteem by English and American students of German, and even been used by several of the latest German dictionary writers. When the publishers asked me to revise the book, originally published in 1888, I undertook the laborious task in the hope of being able to correct a number of actual mistakes, and to add many important words and phrases that had either been overlooked or had recently come into existence. But, especially, I wished to make several general improvements which would materially enhance its practical usefulness, and make it, if possible, the best English-German dictionary in one volume at a moderate price, a book comparable, in its more limited sphere, to the new Grieb-Schröer, Flügel-Schmidt-Tanger, and the small Muret. To the accomplishment of this task nearly all my leisure hours during the last eight years have been devoted, but I am only too conscious that I have not been able fully to realize the aim which I had set before me. I shall at all times be sincerely grateful for notifications of mistakes or important omissions — the only way in which those who use a book of this kind can to some extent repay the compiler for the onerous work he has performed in their interest.

Only the principal accent of the German words has been given, and this, it is hoped, will be found helpful. As the book will in all probability be mainly used by English-speaking students — although not addressed to them exclusively — it did not seem to be equally important to indicate the accentuation of the English words. For the same reason the vocabulary of the German-English part is somewhat fuller than that of the English-German portion. In the former, besides the stock of ordinary words that are bound to appear in both parts, many German dialectal terms (e. g. Deern, man, Marjell, Fluh, etc.) are introduced, as well as the most common German slang expressions — such as occur in every modern German book or newspaper, and are frequently heard in educated families — while there was no necessity to give them in the English-German part. All reasonable assistance for writing German composition, up to an advanced stage, has, however, been given, and it will be found that the idioms of both languages have been treated with particular fullness for a book of this size.

In compiling this new edition the best modern dictionaries of English and German have been consulted, above all the admirable Muret-Sanders, in the compilation of which I myself had for some time a modest share. The nature of this monumental work precludes all thoughts of comparison or rivalry. Also the excellent works of Flügel, Flügel-Schmidt-Tanger, Grieb-Schröer, the small Muret (in 2 vols.), Heyne, Paul, Kluge, Heintze, Saalfeld ; the New English Dictionary, Cassell, Webster's International, the Century, the Standard, Annandale, Chambers, Skeat, and many others, were frequently consulted, and rarely without profit. A comparison of these valuable works with the books enumerated by Miss Weir as her chief authorities shows at a glance the great strides made in the field of English and German lexicography since the publication of the first edition in 1888.

The chief points in which the present edition differs from the original are the following :—

Not only have numerous mistakes and misprints been corrected, and many thousands of new words and phrases been added, but a large number of the old renderings have been corrected and re-arranged. Words etymologically connected have, as a rule, been grouped under the same heading, while in many cases homonyms of different origin, which had been confused in the former edition, have now for the first time been separated. The forms of all the strong and irregular verbs, besides appearing in the Indexes, have been entered in their alphabetical place in the main part of the Dictionary.

In the German-English part the German accentuation has been indicated. In the English-German part, and in the lists of the German strong and irregular verbs, the latest official spelling of 1902 (as adopted by Germany, Austria, and Switzerland) is given. This spelling, which will probably be generally adopted in the future (e. g. Efeu, Tür, gibt, instande sein), has hitherto not appeared in any other English-German dictionary. Wherever the spelling of German words in Part I. and Part II. disagrees, the spelling of Part II. should be followed. The spelling of Part I., however, is the one which until now is found in nearly every ordinary German book.

A great improvement on the old edition is the insertion, in brackets, of the case required in particular phrases by German prepositions that take more than one case. The want of such information is the frequent cause of mistakes in German composition, and the way to avoid these common errors is not always readily discovered even in larger dictionaries. The prepositions required in connection with certain nouns have as a rule been added (e. g. Ehrfurcht (vor), Hoffnung (auf), Lust (zu), Abneigung (gegen), etc.) The cases have been added in all such reflexive verbs as do not take the accusative (e. g. sich denken, sich einbilden, sich verschaffen). The somewhat misleading etwas and jemand have been replaced by the terms eine S., einer S. and einen, einem. In the English-German part great care has been bestowed upon the rendering of foreign terms by their German equivalents. In conformity with the moderate principles of the "Allgemeiner Deutscher Sprachverein," German renderings are generally given alone or in the first place, where in the previous edition the English word had merely been rendered by a German homonym.

Among the new words and phrases inserted will be found many thousands of idiomatic phrases, well-known proverbs that have no literal equivalent in the other language, and familiar quotations ; many ordinary dialectal and colloquial expressions, and a number of German slang terms in common use that often prove puzzling to English students. There will also be found the chief new cycling and motoring terms, ordinary military, postal, railway, tennis, historical, geographical, phonetic and linguistic expressions, newspaper terms and advertisements, the chief technical terms of commerce, education, literature, and art. Space was gained for the very numerous additions by the omission of some lengthy translations of unimportant Biblical passages, some little used and obsolete words, vulgarisms and rare scientific and technical terms. In many cases space was saved by the suppression of compounds, the formation of which presented no difficulty and the component parts of which were given under their separate headings, e. g. "butter-dish" Butterschale, "watermelon" Wassermelone, etc. On the other hand, "butterfly" Schmetterling, "waterlily" Wasserrose, had, of course, to be given, as well as words in which one part of the compound is inflected in German, such as "sunflower" Sonnenblume, "woman-hater" Frauenhasser, Weiberfeind, "goose-quill" Gänsefeder, etc. Thus, while compounds such as Apfelbaum, Buchmacher, Öllampe, or "breadfruit tree," "house door," "tiger-cat," and many others could safely be omitted, words such as Sündflut, Maultier, Heerstrasse, or "lady-bird," "titmouse," "wormwood," and others are given. The "General Rules for the Pronunciation of the German Language" have, at the express wish of the publishers, been reprinted from the first edition, but those who wish for more detailed and more recent information as to the best German pronunciation should consult the books by Viëtor, Siebs, Johannson, and others (see p. ix.) which are cheap and easily accessible. The appendix to the first edition, containing a synopsis of the changes introduced into German orthography in 1880, has been omitted, as it is now quite out of date. Students should consult the little official Prussian spelling-book, and the handy and cheap works by Duden and Sarrazin, the full titles of which are given below. For fuller information on all these works, and for a synopsis of the chief difficulties of German pronunciation, students may refer to my book on the "Teaching of Modern Foreign Languages" (Cambridge: University Press. Third edition, 1906). In case of doubt concerning the best spelling of certain English words I have often been guided by the "Rules for Compositors and Readers," at the University Press, Oxford, by H. Hart, London and Oxford, 1904.

The very full indexes of names (including the chief colloquial forms of proper names) and abbreviations, and the lists of strong and irregular verbs in both parts, are for the most part new, and will, it is hoped, greatly add to the usefulness of the book. The insertion and explanation of some important German "kenningar," such as der grosse Schweiger, der rote Prinz, die rote Erde, der eiserne Kanzler, der alte Fritz, or terms such as Erbkönig, Rübezahl, Königsleutnant, Schildbürger, Buxtehude, etc., will probably be welcome additions. In this way, although in the briefest possible manner, some common German and English realia could be explained.

In conclusion, there remains for me the pleasant duty to render my heartiest thanks to many old pupils and kind friends who, by sending me contributions, or in some other way, have assisted me in my work. Among my friends and colleagues my thanks are due to Professors Fiedler, Herford, Napier, Marshall Ward, and to Messrs. Chas. Elsdon, G. Morier-Hinde, Yule Oldham,

S. Ruhemann, O. Siepmann, Francis Storr, Josiah Walker. Of former pupils I gratefully mention the names of the Misses G. M. Parry, H. Sollas, and J. Burne, and of Messrs. H. Brown, E. C. Quiggin, Thomas Rea, and F. E. Sandbach. I am particularly indebted to my friends and former pupils Mr. E. Bullough, and, above all, to Miss Minna Steele Smith, Head Lecturer in Modern Languages at Newnham College, who have with the greatest care assisted me in the revision of part of the proofs. Much that is good in the book is due to the assistance received from these various kind helpers, while I must alone be responsible for its shortcomings. My thanks are also due to the great pains bestowed on its production by the printers of Cambridge, U. S. A., and the care and resourcefulness of their able press reader. I now dismiss my book from the quiet study into the bustling world and its manifold claims on it with the parting words of the good old Sir Richard Ros :

“Goo, litle book, God sende the good passage . . .
And specially lete this be thi prayere
Vnto hem all that the wil rede or here,
Wher thou art wrong, after ther helpe to calle,
The to correcte in eny parte or alle.”

CAMBRIDGE,

EXPLANATION OF METHOD.

Grouping of words into articles. WORDS etymologically related and having an initial syllable or syllables in common are grouped under this initial syllable or syllables. The completion of each word (the suffixes and second components), being printed in full-faced type, readily catches the eye, thus obviating any difficulty which the breaking up of the words might otherwise present. Words formed by terminations (derivative words) come first in each group in alphabetical order, the compounds following in the same order, but separated from them by the abbreviation Comp. (for Compound).¹ No attempt has been made to distinguish between primary derivatives (such as Kunst, Stamm, Himmel) and secondary (as trinfbar, Spießer, lieblich), such distinctions being deemed beyond the province of a work like the present.

Use of Brackets. When a prefix, suffix, or component of a word is enclosed in brackets it is to be understood as signifying that the unbracketed word is a synonym by itself, and when taken with the bracketed word or syllable forms another synonym, which may be used in the same sense as that in which the unbracketed word is used. thus (Blut-)Ader signifies that Ader and Blutader are both equivalents in a certain sense of the English word 'vein'; in the same way, (ein)tauchen, to dip; (er)läßlich, venial; electric(al), electric; crook(ed)-backed, *buckel*ig, etc., etc. But if a word or phrase enclosed in brackets in one language be followed by a word or phrase enclosed in brackets in the other language, the contents of the one bracket are to be understood as translating the contents of the other: for example — to do good (evil), Gutes (Böses) tun — where Böses is the translation of the bracketed 'evil,' and the phrase Böses tun of the phrase 'to do evil.' When a German word or words enclosed in brackets is followed by no bracketed word or words in English, the contents of the bracket are for the purpose of showing the case required by the German verb it accompanies, or for some other grammatical purpose; thus, when 'to court' is to be rendered by (einer Person) den Hof machen, (einer Person) is inserted for the purpose of informing the student that, although the English verb governs the accusative case, the German requires the dative; in the same way, 'to court' is further defined as sich (um eine S.) bewerben, in order to exhibit the fact that in this sense of 'court' the German equivalent is followed by the accusative with um. In the German-English division (einem etwas) is employed as a short way of saying that the verb to which it is joined governs the dative of the person and the accusative of the thing.

Punctuation. When several synonyms are given, all answering to one sense of a word, they are separated by commas, whilst those representing different senses are separated by semicolons; thus — Fall, decay, ruin, downfall; case (Gram.) — 'decay,' 'ruin,' 'downfall,' being all synonyms of Fall in one sense, are only separated from one another by commas, but they are separated from 'case,' which represents a wholly different sense, by a semicolon. A phrase, on the other hand, even when exhibited in wholly different senses, has the different renderings divided only by commas; before each new sense, however, in the English-German part, an explanatory word or phrase is inserted in parentheses: as — to break down, im Abnehmen sein (as a p.'s health), durchfallen (at an examination), umwerfen (as a carriage) — or — to come round (recover), sich erholen, (change one's opinion) schwanken, sich bedenken, sich anders besinnen, (return, as an anniversary) wiederkehren, (return, as a term) fällig werden, (change, as the wind) sich drehen, etc.

English Synonyms or Explanations of German words. In Part II., or the English-German division of the work, every new sense in which a word is taken is either preceded by an English synonym¹ in Roman type in parentheses, as — to doom (sentence) verurtheilen; (destine) bestimmen — or followed by some explanatory word or phrase in italics in parentheses, as — to do, erweisen (kindness) — or — to drivel, geifern (as infants) —. In place of a synonym, a word is occasionally preceded by an explanatory clause in italics, as — to drink (of beasts) saufen — which denotes that 'drink,' when expressing the action of a beast, is translated by saufen and not by trinken, which is the word employed in the case of human beings.²

Gender of German Nouns shown by accompanying Article or Adjective. The gender of German substantives in this part, too, is shown by the accompanying article der, die, das; but when an adjective is given with the substantive the article is usually omitted and the gender shown by the termination of the adjective, as — dry measure, trockenes Maß; dry cough, trockener Husten.

The term 'Particle.' The term part. (for particle) has been employed throughout to denote a class of words, so numerous in the German language, which, while possessing a certain force, have no precise syntactical relation to the other words in a sentence. This is the only particular in which the ordinary terminology of English grammarians has been departed from.

Similarly spelt words are numbered. Words differing in meaning and origin, but spelt alike, are numbered, so that no difficulty can arise owing to their separation for etymological reasons under different heads

For an explanation of abbreviations, see Abbreviations (p. xiv.).

¹ These words are, of course, only approximately synonymous.

² It is, of course, to be understood that where a synonym of, say, an adjective is explained, the substantive, etc., corresponding to this adjective, and included in the same article, is not in general separately explained: as — Pleasant, adj., freundlich (as a room); (lively) munter, etc. — ness, s., die Freundlichkeit; die Munterkeit.

GENERAL RULES FOR THE PRONUNCIATION OF THE GERMAN LANGUAGE.

Every syllable is pronounced in German, and, with the exceptions mentioned below, every letter of a syllable, its initial and final consonants being articulated with special clearness even where the syllable begun or closed is unaccented and to be uttered rapidly. The final syllable en alone admits of being somewhat slurred or indistinctly pronounced. The difference between the German and English elementary sounds is explained below; taking this difference into account, pronounce each syllable as in English.

Great care ought to be taken that the stress of the voice may fall upon the proper syllable in German words, as the intelligibility of the language in a great measure depends upon this.

Of Vowels.

Vowels are either long or short.

Long Vowels.

A vowel is long: 1. when not followed by any consonant (as da); 2. when followed by only one consonant in the same syllable (as haben, tragbar); 3. when preceding a silent h belonging to the same syllable (as Mohn, Wehr, mähnen); 4. when doubled (as Seele, Meer).

Excep. I. Some monosyllabic words — indeclinable and other pronouns, adverbs and particles expressing syntactical relation (prepositions and conjunctions) — form an exception to 2; such are es, daß, deß, was, man, in, an, von, um, mit, bei, ab, ob, weg.

Excep. II. Similarly, many monosyllabic prefixes and all unaccented suffixes and inflectional terminations, though followed by no consonant or by only one in the same syllable, have the vowel sound short, as be, ge, er, ver, zer, el, em, en, den &c.

Short Vowels.

A vowel is short: 1. when followed by a double consonant (as dd, tt, ff, in Widder, Mutter, fed); 2. when followed by two or more different consonants (as nd, rd, ft, in Land, Warder, Gunft).

Excep. I. When two consonants are brought together after a vowel by the elision of another vowel (as habet for habet, sagst for sagest) the vowel remains long.

Excep. II. Before h, fh, and g the vowels, though generally short, are in some cases long.

Excep. III. The vowel is also long in a number of words when it precedes two consonants, of which one is a liquid or sibilant, as well as in a few other exceptional instances; such are a long sounds like the English a in ah! or the French a in male.

a short “ “ “ “ a in madder; it is the same sound in quality as a long only shortened.

aa is the same as a long.

ä long “ “ “ “ a in dare, the French è in père or e long.

[A few words of Latin origin end in German in äi].

ä short sounds like the English e in get or wrest.

e when long is generally like the English a in mate, pate, fate; but in some words, such as leben, geben, Besen, Frevel, Schnefel, the e sound, though long, is open, somewhat resembling the a in share, care, hare.

e short sounds like the English e in get, letter; but before l or r or the double liquid of a monosyllable (as in jänell, denn, wenn) it resembles the English e in bell. In all monosyllabic prefixes and unaccented suffixes of derivation or inflection the e is nearly equal to the short i in the word English and resembles the e in deny; as the final letter of a word it is very weak and short: the final syllable en is exactly like the en in the English words sudden, ridden.

ee sounds like the long, close, single e, which is represented in English by the a of mate. But when two e's meet belonging to two different syllables each must be separately pronounced.

e after i is mute, and only serves to lengthen the sound of i when the syllable containing the ie is accented; in words borrowed from foreign languages where this syllable is unaccented the e is pronounced separately, short and weak as in famili-e.

i long sounds like the English ee in feet, keep.

i short “ “ “ “ i in mint, wit, bitter.

ie is in sound exactly like i long; see e after i.

o long sounds like the English o in tone, note.

o short “ “ “ “ in not.

oo is sounded exactly like o long.

ö long sounds like the French œu in vœu; it has no exact equivalent in English, and is produced by forming the lips as if to pronounce o long, and really pronouncing the long e.

ü short sounds like the French œu in œuf, the o sound being heard more distinctly than in ö.

¹ English people often pronounce this e incorrectly, such words as habe, liebe sounding with them almost habbey, liebey.

long; the sound partakes of the e sound in the English word mercy and the u sound in the English word murder.

ii long sounds like the English oo in fool.

ii short " " " " u in full.

ii long " " " French u in fût; produce it by forming the lips as if to pronounce double o in wool, yet in the mouth utter the ee sound of eel; with some Germans this is exactly equals the ie in the English word mien, but this is a vulgar pronunciation; the double o sound ought to be distinctly heard.

ii short is much like the long ii pronounced quickly; it resembles the French u in fusse.

ii sounds like the German i long. It is not common, except in words of Greek origin, though some writers use it in order to distinguish words having the same sound but different significations (as feîn, his; feyn, to be); ii is never used in German as equivalent to the English y in year.

Diphthongs.

Diphthongs are always long.

[The „umlaut“ mark (‘‘) was originally e.]

ae has the sound of ä long.

ai " " " the English i in wise.

au " " " " ou in our.

äu " " " " oy in boy.

ei " " " " i in might.

eu " " " " äü.

oi " " " " oi in English.

ui " " " " wee in English.

Of Consonants.

N.B. As a general rule the German language has no silent letters, the only exception to this rule being the letter h, which in certain cases, mentioned below, is mute.

b has the sound of the English b except at the close of a word or of a syllable followed by another consonant, when it assumes more of the sound of p; if, however, in closing a syllable it precedes a syllable of inflection (as in liebest), the softer sound is retained. In the double b, the sound of both b's is soft.

c in genuine German words is not used by itself, f or g being employed instead. Before ä, e, i, ö and ü it has the sound of ç (English tz); before the other vowels and consonants it sounds like the English k. When c closes a syllable and is followed by another beginning with c, the final c is pronounced like t, the initial c of the next syllable having its pronunciation regulated by the letter following it, according to the rules just given. For the pronunciation of ç see h.

d is more truly dental than in English; having a sound at the beginning of words and syllables between the d of do and the th of thee; at the close of a word or syllable, when not preceding a syllable of inflection, this sound is harder and approaches the sound of t. In double d each d has the soft sound, but only in the second or that which commences a syllable is the th sound heard; dt is like the English t.

f single or double, and in all positions has the sound of the English f.

g at the beginning of a syllable is like the English g in gold, good; when it stands at the end of a word or syllable and is preceded by a, o, u or au, its sound is much like gh in the Irish word lough; preceded by e, i, ä, ö, ü, ei, eu or äu, it approaches the sound of the y in yes; this latter sound it also takes after the liquids r and l. North Germans, however, generally retain the hard sound of g (like g in good) throughout all these cases, except in the unaccented syllable ig of such words as herzig, glüht. When a word ending in g is increased by inflection the sound of g is a little softer, but resembles the g of gold, good, etc. Preceded by n, g has the hard, initial sound somewhat like the English g in finger (as lang, King, jung); when, however, the word is increased by inflection the n and g melt into one another as in the ng of the English singer, ringer, bringer (as länger, Ringe, jünger).

[This, of course, does not apply to cases in which the n and g belong to different syllables, as unglick, un-gern, where each letter has its own individual sound.]

In words adopted from the French the g is pronounced as in French, somewhat like the sh in the word English, only deeper as if it were zh (as genie, ren, Genie).

h at the beginning of words is strongly aspirated like the English h in hound; between two vowels the aspiration is weak. As the final letter of a word (Stroh), also when preceded by a vowel and followed by a consonant it is perfectly mute; in both these cases it indicates that the preceding vowel is long (as Mahd, Lohnd).

th is merely t lengthened; see under t.

ch initial sounds like the English k; in words of German origin, however, it only occurs as such in the words Charfreitag and Charnode. In words of foreign origin ch initial is pronounced as in chen (Chemister, China); ch final or in the middle of a word resembles: 1. (after a, o, u and au) the sound of ch in the Scotch word loch; and 2. after e, i, ä, ö, ü, ei, eu or a consonant its sound approaches more nearly to that of h or to the Scotch pronunciation of gh in night, light, etc. (nicht, licht); this is the sound of the ch in the syllable of diminution chen. ch is pronounced like t before s or f provided the s or f form part of the stem; thus in Wachsen, Dohs, Dohlen etc., the chs or chf is equal to x in wax, fox, etc. But ch before the initial f of another syllable, where the f does not form part of the stem, retains the guttural sound like ch final or ch in the middle of a word (as mach-sam, Nach-sicht, Bach's for Baches).

In words of Greek origin, where it occurs as an initial, it has the sound of f before a, o, u or a consonant, but before i or e (see above, Chemister etc.), a softer sound nearly like the y of young preceded by an aspirate (as hyoung). In words adopted from the French ch is pronounced like the French ch or the English sh, as Charlotte, Chifane, Chef, Chaussee (sharlotte, shikane, shef, etc.).

j has the sound of the English y in year, yes.

k " " " " k in kiss. It is never mute before n as in the English know, but sounds as if followed by a short e; nt is like the English nk in thank, think, where both letters belong to the same syllable; where t is the initial of another syllable, each letter must have its original simple sound; instead of tt, d is generally used.

l has the same sound as in the English lily, never like the mute l in chalk, walk, etc.

m & n are the same as in English; for the sound of ng see g.

p & pp have the same sound as in English; ph has the sound of f or of ph in the English word sophistry (as Epheu); when p is joined with f or j, as in Pfend, Pfingten, Paim, the p and f or j must each be heard separately.

q is always followed by u and resembles fev in sound (as quälen which is nearly = kvälen).

r is pronounced like the English r in rugged, round, but with greater force and roughness; in combination with h the h is mute (as der Rhein = Rine).

f has the soft sound of the English s in rose, bosom, at the beginning of a word or syllable or between two vowels (sage, lefen); at the end of a word or syllable it has the sharp, hissing sound of s in this, such, simple (aus, laß).

h & ff are pronounced like the English double s in hiss, miss, fuss; ff is used only after a short vowel; ß after a long vowel or diphthong. At the end of a word, however, and before all consonants ß must be used for ff even where the preceding vowel is short.

ſc has the sound of sk in skate or sc in scorpion before a, o, u or a consonant; before ä, e, i, ö, ü, eu it is equal to sts (as Scipio = Stscipio); ä is now generally used instead of ſc in such cases.

ſch has the sound of the English sh in shut, short; when ſ final concludes one syllable and ch begins the next (as in Rüs-schen, Häus-schen) ſ and ch must be pronounced separately. The ſch of words borrowed from the Latin or Greek languages is equal to sk (as Schema, Scholiast = skama, skolast).

ſt, ſp are pronounced in the middle or at the end of a word like the st, sp in lest, lisp; at the beginning of a word, however, this combination is in some parts of Germany equal to sht, shp (as Stunde, sprechen often = Shtunde, shprechen).

t, though more truly a dental, has the sound of the English t in true, touch, wet; in foreign words, the t before i, when the i is followed by another vowel, and the ti of unaccented syllables sounds like ts (as Portion = Portision); but when the accent rests upon the syllable ti (as Partie), t sounds as in English.

th has the simple sound of t, the h merely serving to indicate that the vowel preceding or following it is to be pronounced long; it has never the sound of the English th in with, thine, thin; in many cases where h is merely a sign of the length of the adjacent vowel the h is omitted by the new rules for orthography (as Ruth now Rut, Theer now Teer).

dt resembles the simple t in sound.

v at the beginning or end of a syllable has the sound of f in fear, father, far; in the middle of a word, according to some authorities, it ought to approach more nearly to the sound of v in live, move, rove; in words borrowed from the French, v retains the sound of the French v; in words taken from other foreign tongues, it is pronounced by some with the hard sound of f, by others with the soft sound of v.

w has a sound closely resembling that of the English v in very; it is never mute before r and h as in the English words wren, wholesome; Ewer is pronounced as Euer.

x in all positions has the sound of ks.

ß " " " " " " of ts in the English marts, colts etc.; ß is used for ss and should be pronounced like t-tz (as setzen = set-sen).

Of Accentuation.

Words, not monosyllabic, have their syllables either accented or unaccented; if two syllables in a word are accented, one receives the principal accent, the other the secondary; if three, one receives the principal, another the secondary and the third a still lighter stress. The accentuation in German can present little difficulty to the English student, since it is generally placed upon the most important syllable of a word and always upon the most important word in a sentence. Hence the rule:—The accent in simple words falls upon the radical syllable and in compounds upon the determinative component. Admirable as this generalization is, it appears to present difficulties to the young student which occasionally lead him into error, besides involving the acquisition of a very large number of exceptions.

Leaving out of consideration the case of monosyllables, about which there can be no doubt, the following rule may be found convenient for guidance:—

A Practical Rule for Accentuation.

The principal accent rests on the first syllable in German words, whether simple or compound, except: Excep. I. In words beginning with the (accentless) prefixes be, ge, ent, emp, er, ver, zer.

Excep. II. Words terminating in et or tren (ieren) have the principal accent on these syllables.

Excep. III. Verbs compounded with particles which form inseparable prefixes, have the principal accent on the root of the verb (as hinter-ge-ben, voll-jä-chen). The same rule applies to most substantives and adjectives derived from these. In composition with adjectives and substantives (except the verbal substantives in ung, which follow the verb from which they are derived) miß has the principal accent, but in composition with verbs is variously accented; thus, where miß precedes another prefix it retains the full accent (as miß-behagen, miß-verstehen); when, however, miß is compounded with simple verbs, the verb thus formed is accented according as it is a separable or inseparable combination, thus miß-beuten (p.p. miß-beutet, supine miß-beuten) takes the principal accent on miß, but miß-beuten (p.p. miß-beutet, supine zu miß-beuten) has the full accent on the second or radical syllable (as miß-beu'ten). Verbal substantives in ung derived from these inseparable verbs have also the principal accent on the second syllable.

Excep. IV. Not the principal, but a secondary accent rests upon the first syllable when that syllable is un prefixed to adjectives (or to the abstract substantives derived from them) directly formed from verbs in bar, lich, sam, (as u'nabw'e'ndbar, u'nabw'e'ndbarfeit, u'naus'ste'h-lich, u'nbu'r'dringlich &c.). But adjectives of this class which are not directly formed from verbs (and some that are—mentioned below) follow the general rule and take the principal accent on the 1st syllable; as—

u'nab'tö'mmlich, —feit	u'ngedei'hlich
u'nanne'h'mlich, —feit	u'ngeni'eßbar, —feit
u'nanw'e'ndbar, —feit	u'ngemö'hlich, —feit
u'nauf'm'e'rksam, —feit	u'nglü'h'lich
u'nbeba'ufsam, —feit	u'ngrü'ndlich
u'nbeba'g'lich, —feit	u'nhei'ßsam
u'nbebü'h'lich, —feit	u'nlei'blich, —feit
u'nber'e'chtbar	u'nle'nf-bar, —sam,
u'nberä'd'tlich	—samfeit
u'nbrau'd'bar, —feit	u'nnatü'rlich, —feit
u'ndefin'i'rbar	u'nra't(h)sam
u'ndefin'i'rbar, —feit	u'nri'h'mlich
u'nbeu'lich, —feit	u'nri'd'bar
u'ndi'enlich, —feit	u'nfo'rgsam
u'neinne'h'mbar	u'ntau'g'lich, —feit
u'neinträ'g'lich	u'numgä'nglich, —feit
u'nempra'nglich, —feit	u'nunter'sche'bbar
u'nempra'ndlich	u'nverträ'g'lich, —feit
u'nentwe'g'bar	u'nvorau's'se'h'bar
u'nerfreu'lich	u'nwa'ßsam
u'nerfre'lich, —feit	u'nwa'hrneh'mbar
u'neri'nerlich	u'nwa'hrsch'einlich, —feit
u'nerqui'd'lich, —feit	u'nwi'rt-lich, —sam,
u'nfo'lg'am, —feit	—samfeit
u'nfo'rmlich	u'zwi'stlich
u'nfri'edlich	u'zi'erlich, —feit
u'nfru'd'tbar	u'zugä'nglich, —feit
u'nfü'h'bar	u'zu'ld'nglich
u'ngebrä'u'lich, —feit	u'zuträ'g'lich u'ngebü'h'lich

It must be borne in mind too that all adjectives having the terminations bar, lich, sam, but derived from other parts of speech than verbs, follow the general rule; and even the exceptions take the accent on the syllable un, provided the idea of negation is to be brought into prominence.

Excep. V. ursprünglich and Ursprünglichkeit have the full accent sometimes upon the first syllable, sometimes upon the radical sprüng.

Excep. VI. The adjective offenbar has the full accent sometimes upon the first syllable, sometimes upon bar; offenbaren, Offenbarer and Offenbarung have however the full accent always upon bar (o'ffenba'ren, O'ffenba'rung &c.).

Excep. VII. In compound particles¹ (adverbs, prepositions and conjunctions compounded with other adverbs, prepositions and conjunctions) the principal accent rests on the second component and only a very slight accent on the first (as he'rü'ber, hi'no'ra'ten, vo'rhe'r; but au'ßer-ha'lb, u'nter-ha'lb, u'nterina'nber, of which both components are not particles, are accentuated according to the general rule; words like berga'b, berga'n must, however, be regarded as compound particles, though the first component is really a substantive; einmal has the full accent in some cases on the first syllable, in others on the second, the sense differing with the accentuation). When compound particles occur as separable prefixes to verbs, the principal accent of the word thus formed still remains on the second syllable (as zu'sa'mmen'setzen, hera'ntommen).

Excep. VIII. The substantives Jahrhundert, &c.: substantives of direction, as Sü'döst; the adjectives leben'dig, wahrhaftig, handgreiflich, leibhaftig, vollkommen, balsam'isch, unzweifelhaft, vortrefflich, vorzüglich, willkommen, hochadelig, zufrieden and those compounded with „all“ (as allmächtig, allweise, allgütig, allmächtig) take the principal accent upon the second syllable; also the adverbs in composition with all, viel, voll, mohl (as allhe'r, allei'n, viellei'cht, mohla'n, mohlau'f).

Excep. IX. The verbs lobpreisen, lobsingen have the full stress sometimes upon the first syllable, sometimes upon the radical.

Observation A. Prefixes the vowel of which is e (be, ge, ent, emp, er, ver, zer) are unaccented.

Observation B. All terminations (derivative or inflectional) of which the vowel is e (ßen, de, e, el, eln, em, en, end, er, ern, est, et, fel, ße, te, tel, the), also the suffixes ig, zig, ßig, are unaccented.

N.B. Unaccented syllables accumulating in a word are to be uttered rapidly.

Observation C. Some verbs, having an unaccented prefix as first syllable, take another prefix before it which serves yet further to modify the meaning of the radical; this prefix has the principal accent (as au'ferzj'e'hen).

Observation D. The particles¹ durch, hinter, über, um, unter, voll and wieder in comp. with verbs, receive the full stress or not according as they form sep. or insep. prefixes, the meaning of the verb being also modified by this circumstance (as du'r'chrei'ten and du'rhy'rei'ten, ü'ber-zie'hen and ü'berzie'h'en).

Multi-Compounds.

Compound words of which one or both components are themselves compounds are called Multi-Compounds. Each component of a Multi-compound receives the accent due to it separately, but the collective accents are subordinated to one another, so that the principal accent falls on the principal component and the whole follows the rules given with regard to the accentuation of simple words or compounds; thus in See'räu'u'ber-gesh'i'dte, See receives the chief accent, schicht the next, räu'b the third, while ge, er and te are unaccented; moreover, the first compound (See'räu'u') has a stronger accent than the second (Gesh'i'dte); in Wo'r'die'se'-'sch'i'ff-fah'r't, Nordsee has a somewhat stronger accent than Schiff-fahrt; while Nord has the full accent, schiff the second, see and fahrt the least.

N.B. But Pa'lm'o'nta't'g, Cha'r'frei'ta'g.

Accentuation of Foreign Words.

1. A number of words derived from the Latin and Greek tongues have been admitted into the German language at such an early period as to have become naturalized and subject to the same laws with regard to accentuation as the language into which they have been adopted.
2. Besides these, however, are many words derived from the same sources which, though regarded as naturalized, still retain their foreign form; these generally retain also their original accent, which in a large number of cases is on the last syllable: such are, Fig'u'r, Natu'r, Doktri'n, civi'l, Zu'fti'g, Humani'a't, Manua'l, Natio'n, Doktri'n, Fe'b'ruar, Magi'stra't, Man'da't, Pa'tie'nt, Pa'tro'n, Philoso'phi'e, Plane't, Präla't, Provi'n'g, Religio'n, religi'o's, subti'l, Stam'm, Stu'de'nt, Tolera'n'g, Triu'mph, univer'sa'l, zivi'l &c.
3. But words of this class do not always retain their original accent when not conforming to the laws of the German language, the accent in many cases being only by analogy placed on the last syllable, as Barba'r, Philoso'ph &c.
4. Some original German words with foreign terminations also take the accent on the last syllable, as Solda't, Mora't, Schwab'do'n &c.
5. In polysyllabic words with German terminations, the principal accent rests on the penult, as die Jdy'ße, die Parti'tel, mani'erlich, harmoni'sch.
6. Some substantives in it have the full accent on the last syllable, others on the penult, as Ruß'i't, Ly'rit, Vo'git, Poe'tis, Politi't, Gramma'tis; also Metaphy'sit and Metaphy'sis, Mathe'ma'tis and Mathe'mati'st.
7. Words borrowed from modern languages are generally pronounced and accentuated as in the language from which they are borrowed.
8. The accentuation in many words is quite irregular, as Theri'e, His'to'rie, Kano'ne, Ka'non, Barome'ter, Thermome'ter, Geome'ter, Tri'meter, Hega'meter, Penta'meter, Alta'r and Alta'r.
9. In many foreign substantives the accent is transferred from one syllable to another when increased by inflection or derivation, as Do'k-tor, Dok'tor'en, Pa'tor, Pa'tro'ren, Profe'ssor, Profe'sso'ren; Ruß'i't, Ruß'ler, musi'ka'listisch, Musi'ka'nt, Melodi'e, melo'disch; Natio'n, nation'a'l; Ä'ther, ä'ther'isch.

¹ The word particle is not used here in the same sense as that in which it is employed in the body of the Dictionary.

Ge-, an unaccented prefix, is used especially to form: (1) Collective nouns derived from substantives, nearly all of the neuter gender, the root vowel of the substantives being, if possible, modified; e.g. Ge'stein, Ge'stüb(e), Ge'wässer, Ge'wöl't, Ge'büsch, Ge'sträuch. (2) Verbal nouns denoting repetition or continuation of the action of the verb, all of the neuter gender and without plural; e.g. Ge'balge, Ge'heul, Ge'rede, Ge'winfel, Ge'seufze, Ge'stöhne. (3) Past participles; e.g. ge'achtet, (esteemed) fr. ach'ten, ge'ächtet, (outlawed) fr. ach'ten, geboren (born) fr. gebären. In words beginning with a vowel the glottal stop should be made after the ge—. In older German a number of past participles were formed without the prefix ge—, and some of these forms survive in poetry or popular and dialectic phrases: kommen, gaugen, bissen. See also worden. For any words not given in the following lists see the simple words.
